

IDENTIFY YOUR TARGETS

- Contact your local health department and ask for the list of food establishments that require a certified manager

Many health departments publish this list publicly or will provide it on request. This is your most targeted prospect list.

- Search Google Maps for restaurants, hotels, schools, and catering companies within 10–15 miles

Look for establishments with multiple locations — one contact can mean multiple sessions.

- Check if your county health department posts recent inspection reports online

Establishments cited for not having a certified manager are your warmest leads.

BEFORE YOU CALL OR EMAIL

- Decide what you will charge per candidate before any conversation
- Have at least 3 open dates ready to offer
- Have your Proctor Registration Number ready to share if asked

PHONE SCRIPT — WHAT TO SAY WHEN SOMEONE PICKS UP

"Hi, my name is [Your Name]. I'm a registered ServSafe proctor in the area. I help restaurants get their managers certified quickly and affordably — I come to your location and administer the exam on-site. Do you currently have a certified food safety manager on staff?"

AFTER THE CALL

- Send the follow-up email with the student steps attached the same day

See the Cold Call Email Template and Student Steps handout in this toolkit.

- Log the contact in your Cold Call Tracker (Checklist 6)
- Set a follow-up reminder for 3–5 business days if no response

■ Your best first client is often a local independent restaurant, not a chain. Owners make decisions on the spot. One yes leads to referrals within their network.
